The UKCA is a British product marking that was created to replace the CE marking following Brexit. Products that are placed on the market in Great Britain (England, Wales and Scotland) require this marking from 1 January 2021. Up to 31 December 2021, manufacturers are still permitted to bring products exclusively carrying the CE marking onto the British market. Afterwards, the UKCA marking must be used and related requirements implemented. Up to the end of 2022, manufacturers are allowed to “provisionally” use the UKCA marking on their products. This can be implemented by adding the relevant marking to the operating manual, an additional marking or similar. From 2023, the UKCA marking must, in most cases, be affixed directly to the product.
